On the occasion of International Women's Day, Dr. Rishma Pai shares her personal side with BioSpectrum-

My Daily Routine-

My day starts very early. I try and work out at least thrice a week. However, I have numerous commitments every day including meetings with government bodies and NGOS, travelling, lectures, etc. which ensure that I am working day in and day out.

My idea of fitness and nutrition-

Fitness and nutrition are extremely important to me. It is very important to be fit and take care of one's health. For example, I get extremely distressed if I do not feel fit or lack energy and, therefore, I try and stick to a fitness routine. However, given my schedule and lifestyle, it does become difficult sometimes. When I finish my Presidency period (I am the current President of the Federation of Obstetric and Gynaecological Societies of India (FOGSI)), I will definitely try and go back to a routine where I can give adequate time to my fitness routine.

My favourite cuisine-

I love Chinese cuisine due to the variety it offers and the many flavors it brings to the palate.

My favorite holiday destination-

My favorite holiday spot is San Francisco.

My idea of balance between personal and professional life-

It is very difficult for doctors to strike a balance between their personal and professional life. For instance, as a gynaecologist, I have numerous engagements throughout the day, such as deliveries and other procedures. I can be called in for an emergency anytime. For all this, I need to be very planned and organized failing which I would never be able to finish the amount of work I have. I am, as such, a very well-planned person because I know I may not get time for a lot of things otherwise. I am also a perfectionist who is never too easily satisfied. Due to this, I end up doing a lot of things myself. However, despite a hectic schedule, I would not want anything to be any different, since this is something I have always wanted to do.

My role model-

I saw this fantastic interview by Indira Nooyi, the CEO of PepsiCo, where she talks about how she balances life between being the top-notch CEO of one of the top most companies of the world and a wife and mother. The story is the same with every woman who is trying to achieve a certain position in her field. She must juggle a million things, plan well, and try to get a little bit of everything into her life. Thus, I look up to women like her, who are super achievers and balance their personal and professional lives beautifully.
