NextGen Science Media raises Rs 1Cr seed funding

31 July 2018 | News

The company raised Rs 1 crore as seed capital, which will be used to develop and launch high quality medical science and news content in print and digital formats in India.

NextGen Science Media (NGSM), a start-up media venture that focuses on emerging medical science and technology trends for new-age clinicians, raised its first round of funding from Singapore-based Emerge Ventures, DC Books India and a group of individual investors.

The company raised Rs 1 crore as seed capital, which will be used to develop and launch high quality medical science and news content in print and digital formats in India.

NGSM's key focus is to generate and disseminate high quality content on latest and emerging developments in the field of medical science and healthcare technologies as well as industry trends for the clinicians, medical researchers, students and key decision makers in healthcare management.

NGSM has unveiled its maiden product recently- India's first medical science and technology news magazine, titled Future Medicine. The magazine, now available in print and digital formats will have doctors, healthcare professionals and allied medical industry as its primary audience.
