

Cloudphysician, Nightingales launch intensive care at home services

11 January 2021 | News

This collaborative approach offers comprehensive critical care designed to help patients easily transition from hospital care to home care

Nightingales, a pioneer in home healthcare in India, in association with Cloudphysician, a leader in intensive care management, has launched first-of-its-kind intensive care at home services to provide specialised world-class intensive care services to critically ill patients in the comfort of their home. The service has currently been introduced in Bengaluru and Mumbai.

The intensive care at home service will be delivered through a comprehensive multidisciplinary team effort led by Cleveland Clinic trained intensivists and an on-site team of experienced clinicians, nurses, and physiotherapists. This collaborative approach by Nightingales Home Healthcare and Cloudphysician offers comprehensive critical care designed to help patients easily transition from hospital care to home care.

Commenting on the launch, Dr Sweta Choudhary, Head - Medical Products & Services at Nightingales, says "With a multidisciplinary team of experts, including certified intensivists, the Nightingales-Cloudphysician combine will offer hospital-like care at home."

Talking about the partnership, Dr Dileep Raman, MD, Co-Founder, Cloudphysician Healthcare said "We are delighted to partner with Nightingales to create a distinctive intensive care at home offering. This is an ideal extension of our remote critical care expertise through which we have managed thousands of patients across several hundred ICU beds across India.