

Medical edtech startup Docemy to offer free coaching for Ukraine returnee students

11 March 2022 | News

Live guidance sessions will also be a part of its engagement drive

Medical education app Docemy, owned by education technology solutions provider Celebrate Learning based in Kochi, has launched an intensive coaching course for foreign medical students looking to crack Foreign Medical Graduate Exam (FMGE). Students can register for the course by clicking on the 'FMGE Course' on the Docemy app.

In a bid to restore continuity in learning for returnee medical students from Ukraine, Docemy is also offering them free access to the newly launched FMGE course. Its FMGE program includes 600 video tutorials covering all the clinical subjects along with slides, quizzes and multiple-choice questions.

Live guidance sessions will also be a part of its engagement drive so that students can directly interact with the experts for guidance in planning their way forward. For FMGE preparations, students will also have access to mock tests and question banks. All tutorial aids and lecture notes are available in offline mode too so students with poor connectivity can access all study materials at all times. Docemy's news feed will also allow students to get the latest updates on medical exam schedules.
