An important breakthrough for healthcare workers, educators, geriatrics and the deaf and hard-of-hearing population

Optrel, a leading manufacturer of respiratory protection, has launched the P Air Clear, the world's first NIOSH-approved N95 respirator with a transparent window.

The P Air Clear is an important breakthrough for healthcare workers, educators, geriatrics and the deaf and hard of hearing population. It offers the highest quality protection with the added benefit of a transparent window, eliminating the communication barrier posed by traditional masks.

Swiss-made with the highest quality material for comfort and function, the P Air Clear features a transparent window, a latex-free head harness and an adjustable nose clip.

"Optrel is committed to bringing world-class respiratory protection solutions to the market," said Grant Cooper, CEO of Optrel, Inc. "The past few years have demonstrated the need for us to expand beyond our core industrial market with respiratory protection that meets the needs of workers in healthcare, education, and a variety of other industries. These new markets demand innovative products that offer superior protection without hindering interpersonal communication. The P Air Clear strikes a balance between protecting workers and bridging the communication barrier posed by traditional N95 masks."
