Radian guides patients through their journey to recovery by facilitating adherence to home protocols and keeping a track on their progress

Radian Mobility, a health-tech company based out of Mumbai, focusing on enhancing mobility awareness through adherence in the physiotherapy and preventative fitness sector has raised $300,000 in its maiden raise from a large US family office.

Radian was set up by CEO Jamshid Pandole, a twenty-two-year financial veteran and avid athlete, and CTO Gaurav Vyas an ex-amazon Computer engineer in 2021.

With 0.59 therapists to patient ratio for every 100,000 population, there is an urgent need for increased interaction between doctors and patients to increase the recovery matrix. Technology will be the only solution and Radian has taken the lead in this space by building a tool for therapists to manage their patients, build customised exercise routines and track their patients' recovery.

Radian has already instituted tie-ups with private and government hospitals & sports associations. The aim is to provide physiotherapists a medium to keep up with their patients journey to recovery and give patients a place to continue treatment at their own pace. With features that are beneficial to all the parties involved, Radian is closer to achieving its goal of filling in the blanks in the recovery process.
