To further strengthen the company's capabilities and accelerate its international growth

Porus Labs, a leading technology-driven manufacturer of specialty chemicals, has announced a partnership with Radhesh Welling. He will join the board and take over as the new Chief Executive Officer (CEO).

Welling will build on Porus' strengths in research & development, process innovation and deep customer relationships to drive growth in new products and chemistries that will serve both existing and new customers.

He has a nearly thirty-year track record of building and leading innovative, high-performance specialty chemicals companies internationally. He was earlier with Navin Fluorine, where he served as Managing Director and Group CEO since 2018. At Navin Fluorine, Welling formulated and led the company's strategic expansion and built a new organisational framework to drive significant growth over last 5 years. Previously, he worked in US with J.M.Huber Corporation.

Established in 1994 in Hyderabad, the company started with as a single manufacturing unit for all Sulpha-based drugs. Since then, Porus Labs has supported domestic API manufacturers and scaled agro-chemical capabilities as well. The company's growth trajectory reflects its commitment to innovation and adaptability in meeting growing industry demands.
