MedLern and SPARSH Hospital collaborate to elevate training innovation

20 June 2024 | News

To improve healthcare training, optimise operations, and enhance patient care outcomes

Bengaluru-based startup MedLern, the only full-stack healthcare training solution for hospitals and healthcare professionals, has announced a strategic partnership with SPARSH Group of Hospitals. This partnership aims to improve healthcare training, optimise operations, and enhance patient care outcomes by leveraging the power of digital solutions.

This collaboration will focus on streamlining training requirements, providing dependable and current learning resources, and simplifying training processes across various departments and employee roles, harnessing global and local expertise in content, trainers and tools.

The partnership will work towards enhancing quality healthcare and operations through services such as content management, competency assessment, employee engagement and measuring the impact of training, all aligned with the latest compliance norms required by NABH. The collaboration will also explore standardising content and amplifying the impact of training across various modes.

MedLern will assist the hospital in maximising ROI from its human resources by tracking completion, coverage, compliance, and impact through systematic training implementation. This approach will ensure consistency, enhanced control and substantial cost savings in measuring and reporting impact to leadership.
