Bengaluru-based NIRAMAI, Parentlane, healthtech company Touchkin and Theranosis are now part of Philips HealthWorks.

The accelerator programme by Dutch technology company Philips, Philips HealthWorks, recently held its first Breakthrough Day at the Philips Innovation Campus in Bengaluru.

Out of a total of 600 startups, top four health tech startups were shortlisted and were given the opportunity to showcase their solutions before a group of healthcare professionals, senior executives of Philips, entrepreneurs and venture capitalists.

Bengaluru-based NIRAMAI, Parentlane, healthtech company Touchkin and Theranosis are now part of Philips HealthWorks.

The 12-week-long accelerator programme is designed to help startups build, test, de-risk and scale their ideas and technologies.

Philips HealthWorks will give access to an extensive network of experts, investors and healthcare partners. Apart from mentoring, the programme provides technical and business expertise as well as access to coworking spaces and innovation labs.

Philips HealthWorks also invests in, partners with and empowers entrepreneurs and ventures that are working to transform personal health and professional healthcare.

The programme connects startups with the expertise they require to make an impact in the healthtech world. Some important features of the accelerator programme include customised modules, cohorts, hands-on mentoring, immersion and training sessions and lastly, breakthrough sessions.
